

Media Coverage

Buchan

Business Strategy | Communication | Public Policy

Company: AusBiotech
Date: 7 October 2009
Publication: News.theage.com.au
Page: Online

theage.com.au
THE AGE

India good biotech partners: AusBiotech

October 7, 2009

The Australian biotechnology sector could benefit from partnerships with India's biotech industry, says Australia's national biotechnology body, AusBiotech.

AusBiotech said India's biotech industry had strong government support and was resilient and growing despite current market conditions.

"With India's track record of fast growth, the largest offering of FDA-approved (US Food and Drug Administration) manufacturing facilities outside the US and strong government support with the national biotechnology strategy, there are significant prospects and opportunities for India and Australia to work together and improve our current trading relations," AusBiotech chief executive Anna Lavelle said.

Dr Lavelle was speaking ahead of the AusBiotech 2009 biotechnology conference in Melbourne later this month, at which Mr Sajai Singh, a partner at Indian law firm J.Sagar Associates, will address delegates.

Mr Singh has represented emerging technology companies and investors in areas of inbound investments in India.

Mr Singh has said that the economic climate had not significantly affected financing in the Indian biotech industry due to the strong reliance upon public funding.

Dr Lavelle said the strength of India's biotech industry highlighted the importance of ongoing government support.

She said the Australian government had recognised the strength of India's biotechnology industry and had committed to develop research relationships with India.

Media Coverage

Buchan

Business Strategy | Communication | Public Policy

Company: AusBiotech
Date: 7 October 2009
Publication: News.smh.com.au
Page: Online

smh.com.au
The Sydney Morning Herald

India good biotech partners: AusBiotech

October 7, 2009

The Australian biotechnology sector could benefit from partnerships with India's biotech industry, says Australia's national biotechnology body, AusBiotech.

AusBiotech said India's biotech industry had strong government support and was resilient and growing despite current market conditions.

"With India's track record of fast growth, the largest offering of FDA-approved (US Food and Drug Administration) manufacturing facilities outside the US and strong government support with the national biotechnology strategy, there are significant prospects and opportunities for India and Australia to work together and improve our current trading relations," AusBiotech chief executive Anna Lavelle said.

Dr Lavelle was speaking ahead of the AusBiotech 2009 biotechnology conference in Melbourne later this month, at which Mr Sajai Singh, a partner at Indian law firm J.Sagar Associates, will address delegates.

Mr Singh has represented emerging technology companies and investors in areas of inbound investments in India.

Mr Singh has said that the economic climate had not significantly affected financing in the Indian biotech industry due to the strong reliance upon public funding.

Dr Lavelle said the strength of India's biotech industry highlighted the importance of ongoing government support.

She said the Australian government had recognised the strength of India's biotechnology industry and had committed to develop research relationships with India.

Media Coverage

Company: AusBiotech
Date: 8 October 2009
Publication: Burnie Advocate
Page: 22

Buchan

Business Strategy | Communication | Public Policy

Looking to India

MELBOURNE — The Australian biotechnology sector could benefit from partnerships with India's biotech industry, says Australia's national biotechnology body. AusBiotech said India's industry had strong government support and was resilient and growing despite current market conditions.

Media Coverage

Company: AusBiotech
Date: 8 October 2009
Publication: Cairns Post
Page: 35

Buchan

Business Strategy | Communication | Public Policy

Join with India

MELBOURNE: The Australian biotechnology sector could benefit from partnerships with India's biotech industry, says Australia's national biotechnology body. AusBiotech said India's industry had strong government support and was resilient and growing, despite market conditions

Media Coverage

Company: AusBiotech
Date: 8 October 2009
Publication: Canberra Times
Page: 15

Buchan

Business Strategy | Communication | Public Policy

IN BRIEF

Indian opportunity

The Australian biotechnology sector could benefit from partnerships with India's biotech industry, Australia's national biotechnology body says. AusBiotech said India's industry had strong government support and was resilient and growing despite current market conditions. "There are significant prospects and opportunities for India and Australia to work together and improve our current trading relations," AusBiotech chief executive Anna Lavelle said. Dr Lavelle was speaking ahead of the AusBiotech 2009 biotechnology conference in Melbourne later this month.

Media Coverage

Company: AusBiotech
Date: 8 October 2009
Publication: Geelong Advertiser
Page: 29

Buchan

Business Strategy | Communication | Public Policy

India links strong

THE Australian biotechnology sector could benefit from partnerships with India's biotech industry, says Australia's national biotechnology body.

AusBiotech chief executive Anna Lavelle said India's industry had strong government support and was resilient and growing despite current market conditions.

"With India's track record of fast growth, the largest offering of FDA-approved manufacturing facilities outside the US and strong government support with the national biotechnology strategy, there are significant prospects and opportunities for India and Australia to work together and improve our current trading relations," Ms Lavelle said ahead of a biotechnology conference in Melbourne later this month.

GOOD: Anna Lavelle

Media Coverage

Company: AusBiotech
Date: 8 October 2009
Publication: Gold Coast Bulletin
Page: 29

Buchan

Business Strategy | Communication | Public Policy

Push for India links

■ THE Australian biotechnology sector could benefit from partnerships with India.

Australia's national biotechnology body AusBiotech said India's industry had strong government support and was resilient and growing despite current market conditions.

AusBiotech chief executive Anna Lavelle said the strength of India's biotech industry highlighted the importance of ongoing government support.

"India offers a lot of potential for Australian biotechnology companies," said Dr Lavelle.

Media Coverage

Company: AusBiotech
Date: 8 October 2009
Publication: Launceston Examiner
Page: 57

Buchan

Business Strategy | Communication | Public Policy

Partnerships: The Australian biotechnology sector could benefit from partnerships with India's biotech industry, says Australia's national biotechnology body. AusBiotech said India's industry had strong government support and was resilient and growing despite current market conditions.

Media Coverage

Company: AusBiotech
Date: 8 October 2009
Publication: Shepparton News
Page: 20

Buchan

Business Strategy | Communication | Public Policy

India may be good for biotech projects

MELBOURNE: The Australian biotechnology sector could benefit from partnerships with India's biotech industry, says Australia's national biotechnology body. AusBiotech said India's industry had strong government support and was resilient and growing despite current market conditions.